Special oral examination : Judging of basic academic and research abilities through questions related to the applicant's field of interest

Guide for the Special Oral Examination

Relationship between the Special Oral Exam and the General Exam

- The special oral examination will be held prior to the general entrance examination, and applicants who are selected based on the submitted documents will be exempted from taking the English and written examinations in the general examination.
- Applicants who are not selected for the special oral examination may switch to the general entrance examination by submitting the necessary additional documents.
- If you switch from the special oral examination to the general entrance examination, the results of the special oral examination will not affect your general examination in any way.
- Applicants for the special oral examination are encouraged to contact the faculty member with whom they wish to conduct research and discuss their research plans prior to submitting their application.

Documents to be submitted for the Master's special oral examination

- Application form, academic transcripts, major survey form (grade summary, desired research for master's degree, career path after graduation, etc.)
- ※The special oral examination does not require the submission of English test scores, but it is recommended that you take the English test at an early stage, as it will be necessary when switching to the general examination.

Special oral examination briefing and laboratory matching consultation

- We plan to hold an information session on the new entrance examination system, the special oral examination, during the winter term.
- Since there are more than 70 laboratories in the Department of EEIS, we plan to provide an opportunity to discuss the selection of the laboratory of your choice or to hear directly from faculty members at the beginning of the academic year.
